SASS FOR WEB DESIGNERS

JON DUCKETT

```

<!DOCTYPE html>
<html>
  <head>
    <title>Sample Page</title>
    <link rel="stylesheet" href="sample.css" />
    <script src="js/sample.js"></script>
  </head>
  <body>
    <h1>Sample Page</h1>
    Main content here...
  </body>
</html>

```

IN THE HEAD

This location is best avoided as:
1. Pages seem slower to load.
2. DOM content is not loaded, when the script is executed so you have to wait for an event like `load` or `DOMContentLoaded` to trigger your functions.

If you must use a `<script>` element within the head of the page, it should be just before the closing `</head>` tag.

```

<!DOCTYPE html>
<html>
  <head>
    <title>Sample Page</title>
    <link rel="stylesheet" href="sample.css" />
  </head>
  <body>
    <h1>Sample Page</h1>
    <script src="js/sample.js"></script>
    Main content here...
  </body>
</html>

```

IN THE PAGE

As with scripts in the `<head>`, those in the middle of the page will slow the rest of the page down when it is loading.

If you use `document.write()`, the `<script>` element has to be placed where you want that content to appear. This is one of several good reasons to avoid using `document.write()`.

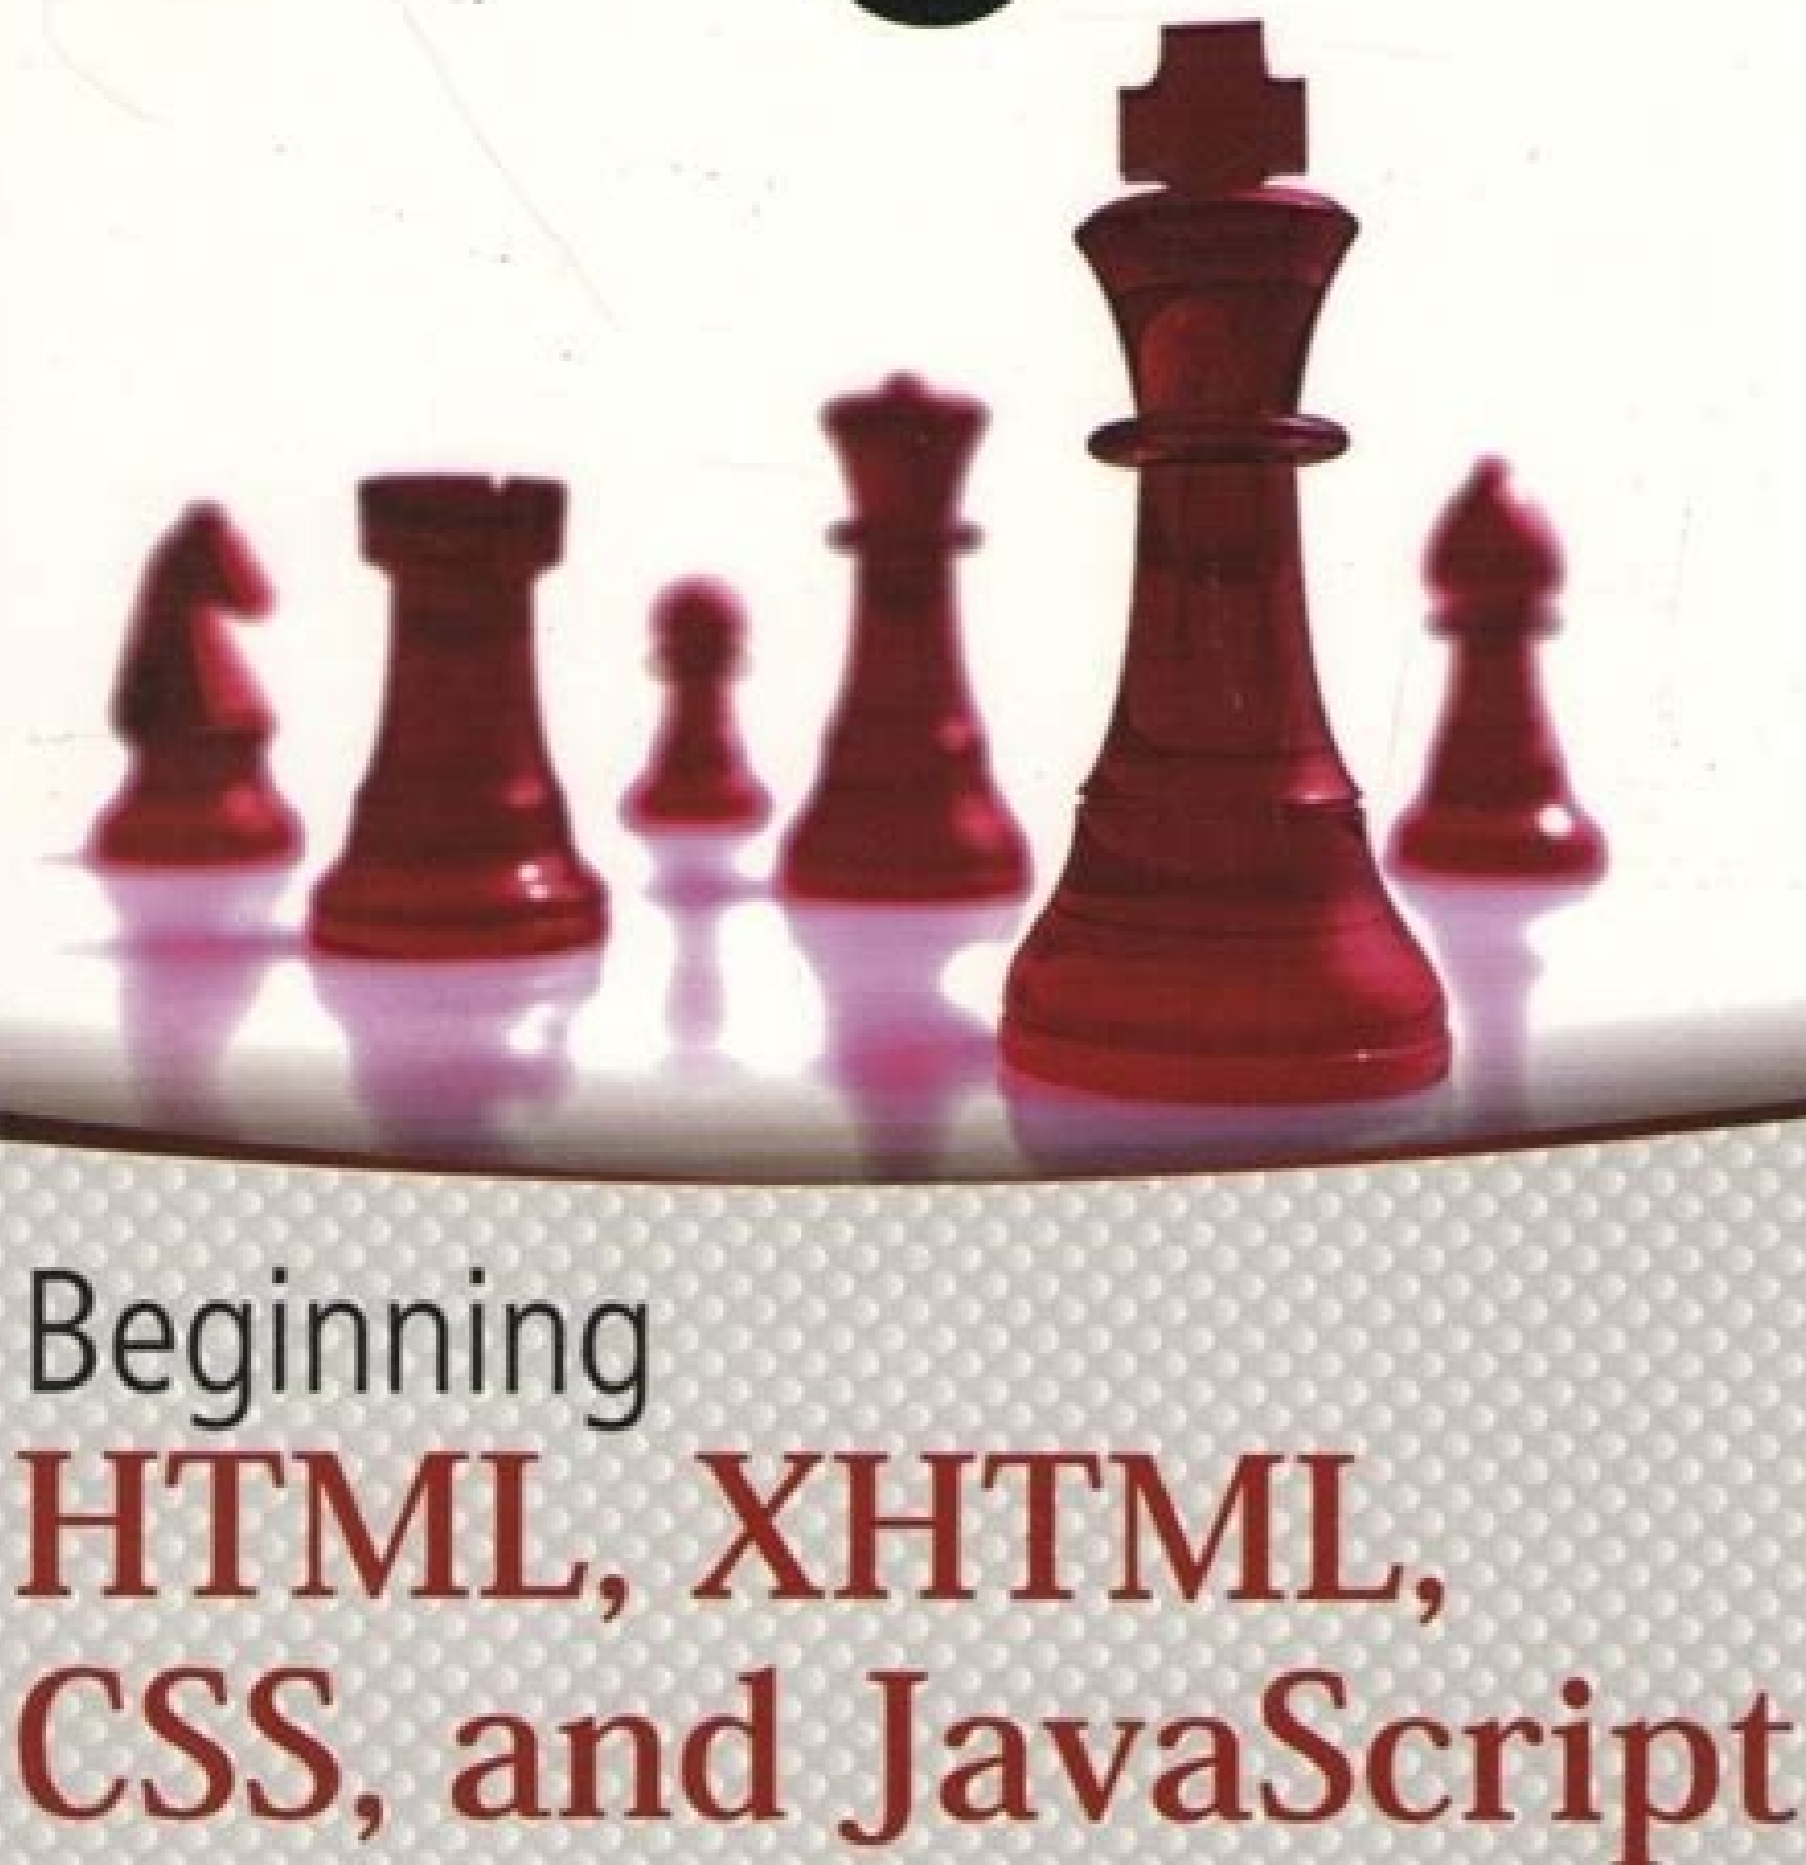

```

<!DOCTYPE html>
<html>
  <head>
    <title>Sample Page</title>
    <link rel="stylesheet" href="sample.css" />
  </head>
  <body>
    <h1>Sample Page</h1>
    Main content here...
    <script src="js/sample.js"></script>
  </body>
</html>

```

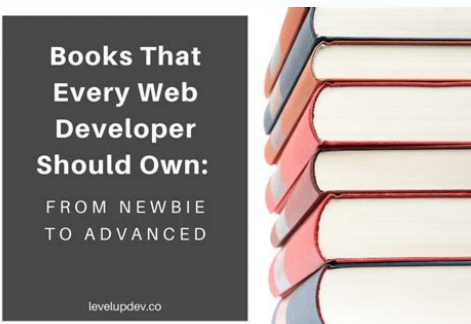

BEFORE THE CLOSING `</body>` TAG

This is an ideal location as:
1. The script is not blocking other things from downloading.
2. The DOM has already loaded by the time the script is executed.

Beginning HTML, XHTML, CSS, and JavaScript

Jon Duckett
